Lewis and Clark Trail: A Photo Journal George Thomas

This collection of photographs is called, "Lewis and Clark Trail - The Photo Journal" for good reason. The attention to detail and accuracy earns the title "The Photo Journal." If Lewis and Clark had had the good fortune to document their amazing journey with photographs, these are the scenes that would have been recorded because they are the scenes described in their journals. Each photograph was taken within three weeks of the date Lewis and Clark camped at or passed each location - thus, landscapes, water flows and vegetative stages are very much as seen by expedition members. The entire route is carefully followed from Camp Dubois on the Mississippi River to Fort Clatsop on the Pacific Ocean and back.
